Stiftung Warentest: AEG twice best in test

Double victory and top grades for AEG hobs

Nürnberg. No matter whether classic radiation hobs or induction – appliances made by AEG are top. The traditional brand has now been awarded the ultimate proof for that: The most influential German testing institute Stiftung Warentest has confirmed in its current edition a double victory for AEG (issue 9/2009).

AEG appliances were the absolute winners in both categories tested. The 78001 K-mn Maxi Sense induction hob was actually given the overall grade 1.9. With a grade of 2.1, the 66331 K-mn hob left behind all other appliances in the test.

In total, Stiftung Warentest tested 17 hobs in these two categories. Both AEG models were certified good to very good "cooking" functions by the reputed testing institute, e.g. parboiling and holding, heat distribution or the simultaneous heating on all cooking fields. But also handling and safety are top for both models. Last but not least, with its overall grade of 1.9, the induction hob also has a convincingly low energy consumption. The comment on the test winner, the AEG 78001 K-mn induction hob, reads as follows: "Best induction hob in test: Powerful, extremely flexible and fast (..)." And it is even less expensive when compared to other induction hobs tested.

And Stiftung Warentest's recommendation for classic radiation hobs is equally clear: "Best radiation hob in test, with roasting and triple circuit zone as well as individual controls for each cooking zone (..)."
